What Termites to Watch Out For

One misconception about termites is that there is only one type of them. This cannot be further from the truth. There are more than 2,000 species of termites in the world.

Luckily, only about 50 of them are found in the United States. Of these 50, about 20 of them fall into the category of "structural pest." But even now that we know that only 1% of termites can affect your home, this doesn't mean that your house is completely safe. You should still be doing what you can to protect your home from structural damage or risk having to shell out thousands of dollars for repairs. Or, in the worst-case scenario, having to demolish your home from years of destruction. Discover more about how our local termite company can help you and get in touch with us today.
